F.B.I. Treating San Bernardino Attack as Terrorism Case

(NY Times) On the day she and her husband killed 14 people and wounded 21 others in San Bernardino, Calif., a woman pledged allegiance to the Islamic State in a Facebook post, officials said Friday, as the F.B.I. announced that it was treating the massacre as an act of terrorism. "The investigation so far has developed indications of radicalization by the killers, and of potential inspiration by foreign terrorist organizations," the F.B.I. director, James B. Comey, said at a news conference here. But he said that investigators had not found evidence that the killers were part of a larger group or terrorist cell. The couple died in a shootout with the police on Wednesday. "There's no indication that they are part of a network," he said. The woman, Tashfeen Malik, declared allegiance to the Islamic State on Facebook at roughly the time of the shooting on Wednesday, according to a Facebook spokesman. At a news conference in San Bernardino, David Bowdich, the F.B.I. assistant director in charge of the Los Angeles office, said he was aware of the post, which was taken down by Facebook on Wednesday, but he would not elaborate. "There's a number of pieces of evidence which has essentially pushed us off the cliff to say we are considering this an act of terrorism," he said.

Climate delegates agree draft deal text

(BBC) Delegates at a UN climate conference in Paris have approved a draft text they hope will form the basis of an agreement to curb global carbon emissions. The 48-page document will be discussed by ministers on Monday. They will try to arrive at a comprehensive settlement by the end of next week. The French climate ambassador warned that major political differences still needed to be resolved. Delegates from 195 countries worked through the night at the conference center in Le Bourget, conscious of a midday Saturday deadline imposed by the French presidency of this meeting. The weighty document will now go forward to ministers who will have to take the many political decisions still required, if the text is to be turned into a long-term agreement. "Nothing has been decided and nothing will be left behind," said French climate ambassador Laurence Tubiana. "This text marks the will of all to reach an agreement. We are not at the end of the route. Major political issues are yet to be resolved," she warned. Many delegates were relieved that they had at least reached this point, as it marks a critical point after four years of negotiations. The document lays out a range of options for ministers on what the long-term goal of the deal should be, as well as the scale and the methods of raising climate finance for poorer nations. Among the many tricky issues they will have to deal with is differentiation: many countries are reluctant to change the way that nations are divided into developed and developing based on where they were in 1992, when the UN Convention was signed. Many richer countries want this to change, and want a greater number of emerging economies to take on emissions reduction targets and become climate finance donors. South Africa's climate ambassador struck a note of warning on this issue. On Friday, mayors from around the world took part in an event as part of the COP 21 summit. "The Paris outcome must be under the Convention and in accordance with its principles and provisions and must not rewrite or re-interpret its decisions," said Nozipho Mxakato-Diseko, who speaks on behalf of more than 130 developing nations. Negotiators had hoped to be much further forward at the end of the week. They started out with a 50-page document and by Friday had reduced it to 36 pages of text.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

Southerly winds will increase today as a storm system approaches the area. Strong gusty winds and rain are expected this evening and overnight. A wet weather pattern will then continue into next week.

Medford Weather:

A very wet and dynamic cold front has moved near the western United States this evening, and this front will bring another round of wind and rain to Northern California this weekend.

Reno Weather:

High pressure brings drier weather and near average temperatures today. A system moves through on Sunday, bringing breezy conditions with light rain and snow, mainly north of Interstate 80. The storm track retreats into the Pacific Northwest early next week with above average temperatures. Unsettled weather with colder temperatures returns by the latter half of next week.

San Francisco Weather:

Dry weather is expected today along with seasonable temperatures. The next weather system will bring rain to the northern part of the district later tonight and Sunday. Dry and mild weather is expected on Monday and Tuesday of next week. Another system is then expected to produce more rain around the middle of next week.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY:

Sacramento Weather:

Several weather systems (Sunday, Wed-Thurs, next Saturday) will bring periods of rain and mountain snow for the upcoming week.

Hanford Weather:

High pressure and dry conditions will prevail today, then a few light showers possible across Merced and mariposa counties on Sunday. Dry and mild conditions will arrive Monday through Wednesday, then possibly a cold storm system Thursday and Friday with widespread precipitation and gusty winds.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

Offshore flow and high pressure building in aloft will support warm and dry conditions through the middle of next week. Back to back low pressure systems will bring increased cloudiness with the chance of rain and mountain snow along with cooler temperatures late next week.

Extreme Southwestern California including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

High pressure aloft and weak offshore flow will bring warm, dry weather through the middle of next week. A low pressure trough will bring cooling late next week along with a chance of showers.

Southeast California Weather:

Warmer than normal temperatures will persist through the middle of next week. Low pressure dropping into the western United States will bring much cooler temperatures and a chance for precipitation during the end of next week.
